

Coolidge Praises Confederate Host In Final Bivouac

New Union of States Cemented by Firm Bond of Mutual Respect, Says President.

DIRECTS HIS TRIBUTE TO GENERAL CARR

Late Leader of Gray Veterans Painted as Type of Gallant Army Commanded by Lee.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.
Washington, May 25.—Unstinted tribute to the Confederate dead was paid today by Calvin Coolidge, the first New Englander to become president since the Civil war. Speaking at the Confederate Memorial day exercises at Arlington, Mr. Coolidge looked across the green slopes where the Confederate and Union dead sleep almost side by side and declared "a mightier force than ever followed Grant or Lee has leveled both their hosts, raised up a united nation and made us all partakers of a new glory."

The chief executive previously had turned to the few remaining veterans in gray, seated just before him, and to their sons and daughters, and with a reminder that "time has softened, discretion has changed," the bitterness of conflict between north and south, said: "Get Respect of Nation."

"Your country respects you for cherishing the memory of those who were the gray, you respect others who cherish the memory of those who were the blue. In that mutual respect may there be a firmer friendship and a stronger and more glorious union."

Addressing those met to honor the Confederate dead as "my fellow countrymen," the president spoke as follows: "If I am correctly informed by history, it is fitting that the Sabbath should be your memorial day. This follows from the belief that except for the forces of Oliver Cromwell, an army was ever more thoroughly religious than that which was commanded by General Lee. Moreover, these ceremonies necessarily are expressive of a hope and a belief that rise above the things of this life."

Both had same God.
"It was Lincoln who pointed out that both sides prayed to the same God. When that is the case, it is only a matter of time when each will see a common end. We can now see clearly what that end is. It is the maintenance of our American form of government, of our American institutions, and of our American life, beneath a common flag, under the blessings of Almighty God."

"It was for this purpose that this nation was brought forth. Our whole course of history has been proceeding in that direction. Out of a common experience, made more enduring by a common sacrifice, we have reached a common conclusion. On this day we pause in memory of those who made their sacrifice in one way. In a few days we shall pause again in memory of those who made their sacrifice in another way. They were all Americans all contending for what they believed were their rights. On many a battlefield they slept side by side. Here, in place which is set aside for the resting place of those who have perished in military duty, both make their final repose. But their country lives."

Bitterness is Passed.
"The bitterness of conflict is passed. Time has softened, discretion has changed it. Your country respects you for cherishing the memory of those who were the gray. You respect others who cherish the memory of those who were the blue. In that mutual respect may there be a firmer friendship and a stronger and more glorious union."

"When I delivered the address dedicating the great monument to General Lee, I said: 'The nation is united by a common bond of mutual respect. The new union of states is cemented by a firm bond of mutual respect. The new union of states is cemented by a firm bond of mutual respect.'"

FARM BLOC FACES TEST OF STRENGTH ON RELIEF BILLS

Famous Group Declared To Be Disintegrated and Devoid of Cohesive Power.

BY THOMAS L. STOKES.
Washington, May 25.—The farm bloc, that group which flattered its will upon congress last session and the one before—stands at the crossroads, and its future will depend a good deal on whether it rises up now and reasserts itself after a period of near-inertia.

"What has become of the farm bloc?" is a question frequently asked nowadays, because of the power this section of congress once wielded, its activities constituting one of the most interesting phases of recent legislative history since its formation a few years ago.

Idle This Session.
It was the first of the effective blocs, drawing from both parties, and for long the strongest. It paved the way for others, which have had their brief days of power. It has a long string of legislative achievements behind it. But it has done virtually nothing this session.

Senator Capper, of Kansas, leader of the senate group, says that it will, and that it is preparing a broad program for the next congress. Others, pointing to its lack of activity during this session, say it is practically dead as a cohesive group, that its functions have been taken over by other smaller groups, such as the insurgent bloc, and that the division in its ranks which has come this year has jeopardized its future.

Test Comes on Farm Relief.
Just how much power it still can wield as a working force will depend on developments during the next two weeks. This will give some indication, too, as to whether it will become again such an organization as will be able to stand together for Capper's program in the next session.

Its test will be on farm relief legislation. Capper has threatened to hold congress in session until a bill is enacted. From the present outlook his threat will meet its challenge.

The McNary-Haugen bill, selected by the bloc, has been held up in the house by a legislative jam and will not be taken up again until the last of this week, which probably will throw final action to the last week before scheduled adjournment. Its fate is doubtful. Leaders of both parties in the house are predicting its defeat there.

Will Need Efficiency.
If it passes it will not reach the senate until the last week of the session. If it fails, some other measure, perhaps the Norris-Sinclair bill, will be brought up, with but a week for its passage in both houses. The farm bloc will be forced to function effectively if it gets final action before June 7.

The farm bloc began this session with three measures on its program, none of which has been enacted, and one of which, the Ford offer for Muscle Shoals, has brought a division in its ranks. It passed in the house, but with the leader of the house farm bloc, Representative Dickinson, of Iowa, voting against it, the bloc is divided in its opinion in the senate, and the Ford offer appears dead there.

Forces Scattered.
The truth-in-fabrics bill, one of the bloc's pet measures, has not been brought before this congress. Unless it gets through some farm relief bill, its program will have come to nothing this session. This situation has led enemies of the bloc to claim its day is over. Without a small pro-

9 VICTIMS ADDED TO INJURED LIST IN AUTO CRASHES

Machines of A. B. Sebrin and Dr. W. A. Selman Crash at West Peachtree St. and Baltimore Block.

28 ARRESTS ARE MADE BY TRAFFIC OFFICERS

Miss Mildred Crisler Is Being Examined for Possible Fractured Skull and Internal Injuries.

While police during Sunday arrested 28 persons for traffic law violations, nine injuries occurred in auto accidents—six victims narrowly escaping death.

Those hurt were A. B. Sebrin, 155 Lucile avenue, and his three daughters, Misses Nova, age 17; Melba, 14, and Coe, 11, all of whom were treated at the Davis-Fischer hospital.

Miss Mildred Crisler, 17, of Norcross; Miss Mildred McClure, 15, of Norcross; M. H. Davenport, 16-year-old student, of Norcross, and W. D. Thompson, 33, of 5 Bishop street, were treated at the Grady hospital.

The other victim was a negro woman, Vera Moss, who was struck down at Fourth and Marietta streets, and declined to go to a hospital for treatment.

Hurt in Collision.
Mr. Sebrin and his three daughters were hurt in a collision between the car the father was driving and one operated by Dr. W. A. Selman, of 74 Penn avenue. The accident occurred at West Peachtree and Baltimore block.

Call Officers Charlie Hajos and C. E. Ford and Lieutenant L. E. Schumate, of the traffic bureau, preferred charges of reckless driving against Dr. Selman.

The doctor stopped his car and rushed the injured to the Davis-Fischer hospital where he personally rendered first aid.

Miss Crisler Hurt.
Miss Crisler is being held under observation at the Grady hospital, doctors fearing that she has suffered a fractured skull and internal injuries. Miss Crisler was hurt in a crash between two automobiles at Spring and Fourteenth streets shortly after 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon.

In the same accident Lois McClure, M. H. Davenport, and W. D. Thompson, were hurt. Their injuries consisted of lacerations and bruises about the head and face.

Davenport, 16-year-old student reported to have been driving one of the machines, was arrested by Lieutenant L. E. Schumate and Call Officer.

Judge Beck Pays Wilson Tribute At Morningside

Mrs. Woodrow Wilson Sends Letter of Appreciation To Workers.

Reading of a letter from Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, and an eloquent tribute to the war president of the United States, by Judge Marcus Beck featured exercises at Morningside Sunday afternoon, under auspices of the Atlanta Woman's club.

"Great men have lived," Judge Beck said, "such as Caesar, who ruled at one time the entire world, and Napoleon, who ruled the whole of Europe; but when they passed away they were gone forever. No so with Woodrow Wilson. It was with his death that every one realized what he had meant, not only to America but to the whole world. They then began to cherish his ideals, and long after we have passed away, the coming generations will still go on."

Mrs. Richardson Presides.
Mrs. Alonzo Richardson, president of the Atlanta Woman's club, presided and introduced the speakers. She spoke of the splendid spirit of patriotism and civic pride which prompted J. K. Smith to make it possible for the club to erect the beautiful memorial. She then introduced Mrs. Smith, who responded with a tribute to Woodrow Wilson and also to the women for the part they have played in the memorial.

Mr. Smith presented the club with a deed to the plot of ground dedicated to the memory of the late president, upon which stands the beautiful granite stone inscribed with a bronze tablet bearing the name of Woodrow Wilson on an appropriate inscription.

Following the addresses, the monument was unveiled by Mrs. William Jasper Smith, mother of Mr. Smith, and Dr. E. L. Connolly, both prominent citizens of Atlanta. Mrs. M. C. Harding, chairman of the memorial committee of the Woman's Club, gave a brief history of the memorial.

Letter From Mrs. Wilson.
Mrs. Richardson then read a letter

Martin and Harvey Land Near Seattle Amid Wild Cheers

Commander of World Flight and Companion in Arctic Adventure Arrive in Port.

SPIRIT OF AMERICA TYPIFIED BY FLYERS

Mrs. Martin and Son Are With Officer as Fishing Boat Steams in From Alaska.

Bellingham, Wash., May 25.—Acclaimed wildly as heroic survivors of a daring adventure, Major Frederick L. Martin, commander of the American 'round the world airplane flight, and Sergeant Alva Harvey, his mechanic, came back to the United States Sunday after their perilous landing in the dismal wastelands of Alaska.

Martin and Harvey arrived on a fishing boat at 10 o'clock in the morning. Thousands of spectators had gathered at the Pacific-American Fisheries wharf here to greet them. The crowd cheered madly, while the local band played a reception to the strains of "Hail, the Conquering Hero Comes."

Mrs. Martin With Him.
Standing on the bridge with her arm over the shoulder of her husband was Mrs. Martin, while their little son, Robert, stood between them. Two impatient to wait until the fishing craft reached the wharf, Mrs. Martin and Robert had gone out in a launch early in the morning to meet the boat.

Martin and Harvey, the latter standing by the rail of the ship, bowed and waved to the crowd as the ship pulled against the dock.

Both airmen appeared to be in excellent condition, their faces bronzed and carrying expressions of joy over their return.

E. B. Deming, president of the Pacific-American fisheries, was the first official welcome.

Gets "Glad Hand."
"When you flew over my home at Beverly Hills, at the start of your flight north, I made up my mind to give you a glad hand some time, and I give it to you now," Deming told Major Martin.

The airmen returned on the steamer Catherine D., on which passage was arranged soon after they had reached Port Moller, in Alaska, after the hazardous ten-day tramp through ice and snow which followed the wreck of their plane.

A spontaneous outburst of pleasure came to Major Martin's lips when he was introduced to Archie W. Shields, vice president of the Pacific-American Fisheries and director of its Alaskan activities.

"I should say I'm glad to meet you," Martin exclaimed. "When we came to your country, we received the finest treatment anyone could get. And the food—say, it saved our lives!"

When all the official greetings had ended, Major and Mrs. Martin went to the home of Mrs. Martin's sister here. Citizens of Bellingham vied with each other in their offers to entertain Sergeant Harvey.

Is Spirit of America.

"We are glad to welcome you back to the states from your perilous adventure," said Mayor John U. Kellogg, of Bellingham, in officially greeting Major Martin. "But we do wish you had been able to go on with your flight. It is such a spirit as yours, to try to the utmost that has made America great, and yours, too," he emphasized in turning to Sergeant Harvey.

Chicago, May 25.—"It was the baby—not me."

Thus did Beulah Annan, expectant mother, and the most beautiful woman who ever faced a Chicago jury on a murder charge, characterize the reasons which influenced her acquittal. Late Saturday night the twelve men and women who had heard her stand and admit that she killed Harry Kalstedt because she was going to become a mother and he tried to attack her, brought in a verdict of not guilty.

Back home Sunday with her husband, in the same apartment where she entertained Kalstedt, struggled with him and killed him, while her husband was at work in a garage, Beulah looked far different from the nervous young woman who, under her hands and shifted about uneasily in her chair during the closing hours of the trial. Shaking her Titan hair and relaxing in a dimple smile, Mrs. Annan gazed coolly at her husband and other relatives and said she had learned a lesson.

"I'm going to be a devoted wife from now on," she declared. "I am going to forget these terrible things, I am going to prepare for my baby's arrival, and I have sworn an oath that I never again will do anything which might cause reproach to attach itself to my name or to my child's name. The most intense longing which I have is that I prove myself to be a good mother and a true wife. I want to show the whole world what kind of a woman I really am."

Mr. Annan appeared to be highly pleased with this expression of Beulah's policy. Summoned to his home by a telephone call from his wife three hours after she had killed Kalstedt and enjoyed a jazz concert on the phonograph, Annan at once announced he would stick by her. And he did. A strong factor in his decision, he confided to friends, was that he knew she was to become the mother of his child.

"I knew that no jury ever would convict me, under the circumstances," Beulah said. "What fooled everybody when I told them in jail that I was going to become a mother was this: We had kept it a secret that the reason I shot Kalstedt was because he would not let me alone when I told him I was going to have a baby. Any woman is justified in shooting a man who did what Harry Kalstedt tried to do to me. The jury realized that."

The Annan home is unchanged. Beulah's stay in jail did not even result in any shifting of the furniture. The same phonograph which played out lively tunes while Beulah watched the body of her dead admirer is still there. But she seems to have lost her taste for phonograph music.

U. S. FLYERS DINED, FETED, ACCLAIMED AS AIR COURIERS

President of Tokio Imperial University Speeds Aviators "Westward on Way of Friendship."

Tokio, May 25.—The American army around-the-world fliers, after a busy round of entertainment in Tokio during which they received much praise for their achievement in crossing the Pacific, left tonight for Kasumigaura with the announcement that they would be glad "to get back to work" in preparation for the resumption of their flight.

Japanese, British and American officials joined in paying tribute to the aviators after their arrival here from Kasumigaura, where they landed Thursday. Their planes were left at Kasumigaura. The aviators said they expected to spend four or five days overhauling their craft and to hop off for Kushimoto next Friday or Saturday.

Received by Prince Kuni.
An elaborate Japanese banquet at the famous Maple club, at which Lieutenant-General Yasumitsu, chairman of the joint army and navy reception committee, was host, concluded Tokio's program of entertainment tonight. Officers of high rank in the army and navy were present, as were also members of the staff of the United States embassy.

General Yasumitsu congratulated the aviators on the success of their flight thus far. American Ambassador Woods also spoke.

This afternoon the fliers were received by Prince Kuni, honorary president of the Imperial aviation society. The prince congratulated the Americans in behalf of the imperial family.

Glory Shared by World.
"Your glory is shared by the whole of mankind," the aviators were told this morning by Yoshino Kozai, president of the Tokio Imperial university, in an address at the university. The minister of education attended this meeting, which was under the auspices of the university and the Aeronautical Research Association of Japan.

"More than 400 years ago," said President Kozai, "slow sailing vessels carried Columbus across the Atlantic. Two centuries later, your pioneers crossed the Rockies. Near a century and a half then elapsed before the Atlantic and the Pacific were linked by rail."

"And now you still are going westward. You are circling the globe by air. We admire and envy you. Blaze Trail Westward."

"Continue westward! Further and further, to your home land. You have come to our shores. Continue now to our neighbors and through all the continents of the world, making all nations closer neighbors and friends. We bid you Godspeed. We everywhere follow your journey with admiration and congratulations."

"Your daring, backed by science, a happy union of courage and knowledge, gained you the honor of being the first human beings to connect the two shores of the Pacific through the sky, through the cold, foggy air of the north Pacific. I am sure the same spirit and skill will make you pioneers flying around the world."

PRESIDENT TO SIGN REVENUE MEASURE BUT WITH REGRET

Washington Observers Believe Coolidge Will Accept Bill Passed by Congress.

TREASURY BACKS UP ON DEFICIT HOWL

Experts Now Agree That Surplus Sufficient To Pay Bonus Installment Will Accrue in 1925.

Washington, May 25.—There are strong reasons for stating that President Coolidge will sign the compromise tax bill, though with some regret. It is not the bill he wanted, but it is better than none, and he will affix his signature for that reason, unless Washington has completely misread the president's mind.

This will enable the republicans to go before the electorate having obtained some tax reduction. There is some chagrin for them in the fact that the bill essentially is the democratic plan, but the administration took the lead in demanding tax reduction and the fact that the rates were set by the opposing party is not causing republicans much real worry.

Opinion Unanimous.
Opinion is overwhelming here, both in congress and among political observers, that the president will accept the bill because it does give tax relief, the thing which Coolidge has repeatedly said the country wants more than anything else.

He would have preferred the Mellon plan which would cut maximum surtaxes to 25 per cent. But the compromise maximum of 40 per cent is better than the existing rate of 50 per cent. The significant feature is that the compromise bill cuts in half the taxes of every person earning less than $8,000 a year—and that includes all except a fractional minority of the nation. This means tax relief for the poor man and Coolidge is not disposed to deny this boon for theoretical reasons.

To Leave Surplus.
One other test, in addition, must be passed by any bill which Coolidge approves. It must provide adequate revenue. The first reaction of the treasury was that the present measure would leave a huge deficit. But treasury experts, who always try to be agreeable, have revised their figures so that it now appears the government would have a surplus of $138,000,000 in 1925 under the new bill, enough to cover the soldier bonus requirements.

The bill comes up in the house Monday and quick approval is anticipated. Then the measure goes to the senate. Coolidge will have treasury experts analyze it line by line. Until that analysis is made, the president will not know himself positively whether he will sign the bill or not. But unless some hidden defects are uncovered, his approval is practically certain. So far as the bill is now understood at the white house, it is acceptable.

Loew's Grand To Present Scenes Taken on Constitution's Tour.

Atlantans luck enough to have been members of The Constitution's big Florida fishing tour, their friends and those who have been following experiences of the enthusiastic sportsmen in the columns of this newspaper now have a chance to see for themselves what fun and sport this trip offered. Scenes all along the way, taken by Tracy Matthews, staff photographer and movie camera-man of The Constitution will be shown all this week at Loew's Grand theater in addition to the regular feature movie, and a ready for showing at the local vaudeville house.

The Constitution's tour to Panama City started on Saturday, May 17, in two sections, and from the arrival next day until the return, the week was one of a rounded enjoyment. Fishing, bathing and everything else that goes with a Gulf coast town was on the program. True hospitality was the keynote of the residents of the cities and towns passed through on the journey while the tourists practically owned Panama City and the surrounding country along St. Andrews Bay.

Every interesting event of the trip was filmed by Mr. Matthews, whose photographic work is known throughout the United States. Mr. Matthews declared Sunday on completion of the work of getting the film cut and put together again, that greater success could hardly have been achieved. Many faces familiar to Atlantans will be seen in this picture which will be shown three times daily at Loew's Grand theater, and four times on Saturday.

SCHOOL OFFICIAL CONFESSES CRIME AGAINST STUDENT

Admits Unseemly Conduct With Boy Friend of Murdered Robert Franks.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.
Chicago, May 25.—Confronted by a boy student at a private school, attended by Robert Franks, who was slain in a supposed kidnapping, Mott Kirk Mitchell, assistant principal and athletic instructor, tonight admitted according to the state's attorney, he had behaved in an unseemly manner toward the student. No reference was made to the Franks boy.

The admission was made, according to State's Attorney Crowe, after four hours of questioning, which began shortly after the Franks funeral service this afternoon. Search for other students of the school, and orders to bring other professors to the state attorney's office for questioning were issued immediately after the announcement.

A leaf from an automobile spring, such as is often used to remove tires, and bound with physicians tape, was found by the investigators for the Hound and Examiner tonight near the place where the Franks boy was last seen. Blood stains on the tape were analyzed and pronounced as human blood, apparently five or six days old, according to the newspaper.

FOUR MEN JAILED IN HOLDUP PROBE

Frank Pope Webb Joins Leland L. Harvey and Alleged Confabes Behind the Bars.

RAIDS ON LOITERERS AND "DIVES" ORDERED.
Acting under orders from Acting Chief of Police Jett, officers launched a drive Sunday against "loiterers and dives" on the streets and places suspected of being "dives."

Up to midnight Sunday 140 arrests had been made, including 58 drunks and 19 persons whose records will be investigated by detectives. The campaign followed the arrest of Leland Harvey, who told police "poker playing" was chief occupation. Chief Jett says he intends to cut down the membership of this fraternity, or make this form of occupation as costly as possible.

Four Macon men are now under arrest, three in Atlanta and one in the Central City, pending investigation by the local police of a series of daring holdups in the center of the city recently.

Frank Pope Webb, 20, was jailed Sunday in Macon, following arrests here Saturday night of Leland L. Harvey, alias Donegan, M. C. Willis, and G. A. McMahon.

Harvey was arrested by Officer J. H. Flury after the prisoner had been recognized by an alleged holdup victim in a cafe on Peachtree street near Five Points. One of his companions was arrested in the same cafe and another in a downtown hotel, after the capture of the other two.

Webb's arrest followed messages sent to Macon Sunday by Detective J. Lewis Whitley, who grilled the three men caught in Atlanta for three hours Sunday morning.

Officers say that Harvey admits having held up a Greek fruit dealer in the Arcade building, claiming that hunger and lack of employment drove him to the crime. At the same time, however, he defended Willis and McMahon, declaring they had no hand in the robbery.

In addition to robbery of the Greek fruit dealer, Harvey is suspected of holding up the Schulte cigar store, at Broad and Marietta streets, and the L. W. Rogers Grocery store, 212 South Pryor street. He has been identified by clerks from both stores, detectives declare.

Detectives Lon W. Evans and J. C. Simmons left Sunday night for Macon to bring Webb to Atlanta.

Atlantan and Companion Were Several Hundred Yards From Bank When Tossed Into Water.

LIFE OF T. E. COBB SAVED BY FRIENDS

Wife of Victim Was One of a Party of Sunday Picnickers at the Lake Near Fayetteville.

Maurice D. McDonald, 32, of 579 Highland avenue, was drowned Sunday morning when the boat which he and T. E. Cobb, of 631 Washington street, were rowing capsized in Lake Bennett, near Fayetteville.

His companion swam to shallow water and called to other members of the party for aid. He was then so exhausted, it is stated, that he would have drowned within a few feet of shore had he not been dragged to the shore. The boat was several hundred yards from the bank when it was overturned and McDonald was dead before his friends reached the scene.

Other members of the party, Mrs. Maurice McDonald, wife of the victim; Mrs. T. E. Cobb, Miss Jeanette Manning, Terrell A. Long and Dr. H. F. Askan, all of Atlanta, were eating lunch in a clump of woods out of sight of the lake and knew nothing of the accident until attracted by the cries of Cobb.

Families, living in the neighborhood of the lake, offered their assistance in recovering the body and the lake was dragged. Doctors from Fayetteville used first aid methods and an ambulance was rushed from Atlanta to Fayetteville with a pulmonologist, which arrived on the scene too late to save the life of the victim.

McDonald, who had been married less than a year, although unable to swim, was devoted to boating. He usually went to the lake on Sunday whenever the weather permitted.

The ambulance of Greengrass & Band brought him to Atlanta. Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

McDonald was employed by J. T. Eljer and company, on Produce Row, as a bookkeeper.

Near East Relief Work Described In 18 Churches

Seven Thousand People Hear Story of Sufferings Following War.

Eighteen churches of Atlanta, with combined congregations of approximately 7,000 people, Sunday morning heard of the work of the Near East relief in the Bible lands and the great tragedy that stands as a background to what has been called by several noted men "the greatest humanitarian work in the history of civilization."

Numbered among the speakers who occupied the pulpits in the various churches of this city were some of the biggest officials of the organization who came to this city especially to tell Atlanta churchgoers what had been accomplished by the American people in the Near East, and of problems that still confront the Near East relief.

In each instance the speakers told of the troublesome times after the outbreak of the war, how millions were made destitute, among these numbers thousands of children, made orphans through the Turkish massacres. The congregations then heard of the great Syrian disaster (several of the speakers were in the vicinity at the time), and how the Near East relief took over the work until the American Red Cross had perfected an organization in the Near East, Orphanage Work Shown.

The work in the large orphanages of the Near East was detailed, and stories told of the thousands of children who died before help could be given. The work of several Georgia people, who are numbered among the field representatives of the organization, was also cited.

The Near East relief, the speakers declared, had educated thousands of the orphans since this phase of the work started. Thousands more are now being prepared to take their place in life. The children are clothed, fed and educated until they reach the age where they can go out into the world and make a living for themselves.

Several of the speakers mentioned the sending of Pete O. Floyd, a Georgia boy, to the Near East, where a cotton school is being formed and where the older orphan boys will be taught how to cultivate the staple.

Unusually large congregations in practically all the churches heard the various speakers, and response to the appeals was in every instance reported most liberal.

Among the prominent speakers who were heard were John W. Mace, of New York, national director of the Near East relief, and one of the most outstanding men in the organization; Mrs. Jeannette W. Emrich, head of the women's department of the organization who made a remarkable address at the last session of the General Federation of Women's Clubs held in this city; Dr. A. C. McCrea, of New York, head of the school and college department; James O. Arroll, and M. T. Kalaidjian, both of the national headquarters of the Near East relief, and Colonel Boyd W. The winning team was composed of Misses Elizabeth Watts, Katherine Akin and Louise Clark. Members of the Kismet society's debating team were Garnette Lipscomb, Charles Wheeler and C. W. Kume, Jr. The subject for debate was "Resolved, That Our State Judges Should Be Appointed by State Officials, in a Similar Manner to Federal Judges, and for Similar Terms," and negative was victorious.

Dr. L. A. White, pastor of the First Baptist church, preached the baccalaureate sermon at 11 o'clock Sunday morning.

Alabama Farmers REPLANTING COTTON.

Huntsville, Ala., May 25.—(Special.)—Reports from all sections of north Alabama show that farmers of this region are making rapid progress in replanting of cotton, a large proportion of which was killed by the cold weather that followed the first planting. The farmers generally have a good stand of late cotton. The average is declared to be at least a month later than last year, which will barely give the plant time to mature, even with a late fall. There has been no increase in cotton acreage, but more fertilizer is being used, and there has been an increase in most of the other farm crops.

Dr. S. R. Belk Will Found Lectureship at Wesleyan

Conditions of the new lectureship at Wesleyan college, started by Dr. S. R. Belk, of Atlanta, with a check of $2,000, were made public Sunday, showing that six or more lectures are to be given annually.

Wesleyan is the oldest female college in the world. Dr. S. R. Belk, the founder of the new scholarship, has been a member of the board of trustees since 1909. He is pastor of Trinity Methodist church in Atlanta and one of the leading figures in Methodism in the south.

With the $2,000 as a nucleus, a fund of $5,000 will be raised through gifts to be made later by Dr. Belk or donations from other friends of the college.

Dr. Belk's letter to the board of trustees announcing his gift was as follows:

"With a firm faith in the goodness of God and in Christ as the only hope of salvation, and believing in Christian education as a means of advancing our Lord's kingdom and feeling sure that the education of the womanhood of our country is a Christian duty, devoted to the cause of Christianity, will help to safeguard the home and the church; and believing that I can advance these ends by leaving the foundation of a lectureship at Wesleyan college, I have donated to the college the sum of $2,000, to be used by the board of trustees in the following conditions:

1. This sum, with other gifts that I hope to make, or gifts from others, for this purpose, shall be invested, and the interest added to the principal until the sum of five thousand $5,000 dollars is secured; and the interest thereafter shall be used in the payment of a lectureship at Wesleyan college, Macon, Ga.
2. The board of trustees shall select the lecturer upon the nomination of the faculty of the college, and the lecturer shall be given such credit for the preliminary work necessary to securing the lectureship as the board of trustees may deem proper.
3. The lectures shall be delivered annually before the students and faculty of Wesleyan college, at such time and place as the board of trustees may select. The manuscripts of the lectures shall be deposited in the college, and the copyright shall be added to the principal. However, when the fund shall have reached the sum of twenty thousand ($20,000) dollars, a part of said interest may be used for the endowment of a chair of Christian evidences.
4. Several courses of lectures may be delivered at earlier dates, if sufficient funds can be provided by donation.
5. My sole purpose in giving this sum is the glory of God, and the hope that through the gifts of others the fund may increase, and that the 'Wesleyan college'—the oldest chartered college for women in the world—may equip many noble women to promote the cause of our Lord and His kingdom.

SAVANNAH STORE OWNER WOUNDED; NEGRO IS HUNTED

Savannah, Ga., May 25.—After a search lasting nearly all Saturday night and today, police and detectives are still without a clue to the identity of the negro bandit who fired five shots at W. H. Gartemann, proprietor of a store at Thirty-third and East Broad streets, Saturday night, when the storekeeper refused to obey his commands. Only one of the shots took effect, striking Mr. Gartemann in the shoulder, severing an artery, and nearly causing his death from loss of blood before the flow could be stanching.

The negro swiftly backed to the door on the East Broad street side, taking a shot at C. F. Weathers, 515 Thirty-fourth street, east, as the latter came walking down the Atlantic Coast Line tracks with a friend, inflicting a minor flesh wound in the leg.

Police were notified of the occurrence around 10:30 o'clock. Lieutenant Clancy, with Call Officer Weber came out immediately, the report having stated Mr. Gartemann was killed. Within a few minutes Sergeant Lively and Detective Sergeant Pate arrived with detectives. They found the injured man being carried to an ambulance, in which he was moved to the hospital. At that time he could scarcely speak, and from his condition police believed his wounds were very serious, if not fatal.

FARM BLOC FACES TEST OF STRENGTH

During this session, however, various members of the bloc have worked actively with other groups on certain measures. They were behind the soldier bonus, some of them were for high surtaxes, and others have joined in the movement for railroad legislation.

Capper says the bloc is not dead, but will go forward next session. The inaction this session he lays to the press of other business, and points out legislation which has been successful through support from members of the group.

Sees Broad Program Ahead.

"What we will strive for next session is a broad, permanent program for keeping agriculture on a sound basis, and for repeal of section 15-A of the transportation act," Capper said. "There are several points in this permanent program, one of which is my bill for a federal marketing bureau."

"The time has come to look forward to a broad future program for agriculture, instead of temporary measures for emergency relief, and that will be the farm bloc's aim hereafter."

COOLIDGE PRAISES CONFEDERATE HOST

Grant in the city of Washington, General Carr was present with others of his comrades and responded for the confederacy with a most appropriate tribute. He has lately passed away, one of the last of a talented and gallant corps of officers. To the memory of him whom I had seen and heard and knew, as the representative of that now silent host, whom I did not know, I now offer my tribute. We know that it is providence that would have it so. We see and we obey. A mightier force than ever followed Grant or Lee has leveled both their hosts, raised up a united nation and made us all partakers of new glory.

Must Remember Past.

"It is not for us to forge the past but to remember it, that we may profit by it. It is good, we cannot change it. We must put our emphasis on the present and put into effect the lessons the past has taught us. All about us sleep those of many different beliefs, and many divergent actions, but America claims them all. Her flag floats over them. Her government protects them. They all rest in the same divine peace."

Organizations participating in the memorial exercises include the Confederate Southern Memorial association, the United Confederate Veterans, United Daughters of the Confederacy, Sons of Confederate Veterans, and Southern Relief Society. Representative Wilson, of Mississippi, also delivered an address, and after the exercises flowers were placed on the graves of the Confederate dead.

mander of the flight, replied to President Coolidge's address, modestly acknowledging the compliments and thanking the hosts.

Ambassador Woods replied to an address by Baron Sakatani, vice president of the Imperial aviation society, at a luncheon given by the society for the aviators today. Baron Sakatani paid eloquent tribute to the accomplishment of the airman.

"This great flight," said Ambassador Woods, in his reply, "which marks an epoch in the annals of aviation, cannot fail to have the most important implications."

"Our aviators' performance has elicited the admiration of the world. For the first time in history, Japan and America have been linked by air, a striking tribute to the progress of aviation. The conquering of the Pacific shows the future possibilities of aerial communication to be boundless and the day is not far distant when such communication between our two countries will be rapid and regular."

"I wish finally to emphasize the influence which the science of aviation can have upon the cause of mutual understanding and good will, lying so close to my heart."

PRESIDENT TO SIGN REVENUE MEASURE

scored when he first saw the compromise bill and his critical attitude led to inference that Coolidge would veto the bill and that Mellon would resign if congress passed the measure over his head. But that storm has pretty much blown over and while Mellon always will look askance at this step-child which congress is fostering into his household, he probably will turn out to be a dutiful, if somewhat grumbling, step-father.

Politically speaking, the president would invite endless trouble and possibly disaster by vetoing the tax bill. His own party colleagues in both houses are overwhelmingly for the compromise bill and they would have great difficulty in going before their constituents favoring the bill and at the same time trying to explain away a veto by the president. MUSEUM OF ART URGED FOR CITY

Declaring that the opportunity is now ripe for Atlanta to secure a permanent art museum, J. J. Haverly, chairman of the art committee of the chamber of commerce, on Sunday pointed to the magnificent attendance which has greeted the great exhibition of paintings and sculptures at the Biltmore hotel as evidence of the keen interest in art matters among the people of the city.

The Atlanta Art association has sufficient money on hand, said Mr. Haverly, to erect the first unit of the magnificent art museum which is planned and all that is needed before work is commenced is the permission of the city authorities to use a site in Piedmont park. This site has been selected by the art association and the city art commission and work can commence as soon as the right to use it is given.

Site Is Ideal.
"The site selected," said Mr. Haverly, "is ideal, and the city has already been requested to give a deed to the museum for the building and a sufficient amount of ground for approaches."

Referring again to the collection brought to Atlanta by the Grand Central Art Galleries of New York, which will continue on view, without any admission charge, at the Biltmore every day this week, Mr. Haverly said that the most important result of this exhibition will fail unless the city gives this site for a museum.

"The purpose of the exhibition," he said, "will fail, in large measure, unless we can get the city officials to consent to give the ground for the museum."

Is Not Luxury.
"Art is not a luxury," he continued, "it is not an amusement for the cultivated few, it is the heritage of all who have beauty in their souls and is a glorious connecting link with all ages. In the exhibition now at the Biltmore the spirit of America shines forth through the work of American artists. It is a fresh and virile art. It knows the old forms of beauty from centuries past, and it sees and portrays in them the glorious spirit of American freedom."

While it is probable that the greater part of the credit for securing this magnificent exhibition for Atlanta is due to Mr. Haverly himself, he did not mention his own efforts in telling how a little group of Atlantans worked to bring it here. He praised the work done by Mrs. Sam Inman, chairman of the entertainment committee; by Paul Norcross, president of the chamber of commerce; by G. F. Willis, chairman of the finance committee; by J. Carroll Payne, E. Marvin Underwood, Mrs. J. R. Otley, Mrs. Charles M. Jerome, Mrs. Wilmer L. Moore, C. B. Bidwell, Robert Parker, John W. Grant, Frank E. Lowenstein, and others.

The exhibition at the Biltmore will be open to the public every day this week from 10:30 a. m. to 10:30 p. m. During the day, Monday, the Fine Arts club, Mrs. A. Ten Eyck Brown, president, will be hosts, and Monday evening the Civitan club, Joseph S. Reynolds, president, will be in charge.

To Purchase Picture.
It was decided on Saturday by the art association, to purchase the painting "The Path of the Moon," by George Elmer Browne, A. N. A., which has probably caused more favorable comment than any other in the whole collection of four hundred odd. This will be bought for the Atlanta museum, honoring the memory of Isabel Newman Howard.

Mr. Browne, the artist, has himself contributed $500 towards the purchase price, leaving the net amount $2,000. This is to be raised by popular subscription and a committee was appointed on Sunday to direct the collection of this amount. This committee will meet to discuss ways and means at the Biltmore hotel, on Monday night at 8 o'clock. The members of the committee are as follows:

Mrs. Edwin W. Moore, chairman; Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Foreman; Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Bidwell; Mr. and Mrs. Hunt Chipley; Mrs. John Perdue; Miss Virginia Woolfe; Mrs. Samuel M. Evans; Miss Kate Edwards; Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Jerome; Mr. and Mrs. Hollins N. Randolph; Mr. Albert I. Thornton; Mr. and Mrs. Wilmer L. TWO HURT IN CYCLONE; 5 FAMILIES HOMELESS

LET NATURE CURE CHURCH IS PLEA

Grand Rapids, Mich., May 25.—The possibility of the union of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America and the Presbyterian Church in the United States (south) came before the 136th Presbyterian general assembly with an announcement that Dr. Thornton Walling, moderator of the southern assembly, will attend the assembly here Tuesday.

Grand Rapids, Mich., May 25.—A brilliant plea against "any drastic 'surgical' operation" in the church, which was taken as a direct reference to the attempt being made to compel the New York presbytery to receive Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, Baptist clergyman from the pulpit of the First Presbyterian church, of New York, was sounded last night by Dr. Charles F. Wishart, retiring moderator of the Presbyterian general assembly, in an address at a men's dinner here.

The address by Dr. Wishart, who is president of Western college, was made before 800 men more than half of whom are commissioners to the 136th general assembly of the church.

Perfect Operations Cited.
"Some people recommend surgery for ill," Dr. Wishart said, "so far as drastic surgery is concerned, I am an extreme conservative. I have known of a good many surgical operations that have been absolutely perfect, but the patient died. There may be times in the human body when surgical operations are absolutely necessary, but I have read church history, and I have never known a time in the history of the church when drastic surgical methods proved of any permanent value."

"Any surgery is wrong in the church, if there is any deviation from belief or the supreme law of love, there is only one cure. Just as the white corpuscles battle the disease germ in the human body, so the church must be renewed, rather than by any official action."

Need Real Revival.
"This company of 800 men has in its midst a dynamic power to renew the life of the church, our illness can only be met by real revival. It is within our power with prayer and patience and an attempt at mutual understanding to bring this assembly out to a great spiritual unity."

A long ovation greeted the conclusion of the address.

Dr. Clarence B. MacArthur, who succeeded Dr. Wishart as moderator, did not attend the dinner. In his place was William J. Bryan, vice moderator, who spoke briefly following Dr. Wishart, but did not touch on any controversial matters.

There was no assembly session today. Pulpits of local Protestant churches were occupied by visiting commissioners to the assembly.

Frank O. Lowden, former governor of Illinois, spoke at a popular meeting this afternoon. He made a plea that the same rules that govern individuals also govern nations.

Politics No Excuse.
"Many persons still hold," he said, "that the rules of conduct which govern men generally do not apply in politics."

BLOODHOUNDS FAIL TO TRACK FOILED SAVANNAH ROBBER
Savannah, Ga., May 25.—Bloodhounds were used today to track down the masked bandit who attempted to hold up William C. Bartholomew, engineer at the waterworks, at 4:30 o'clock this morning, but the trail was lost after it had been followed for some distance.

Engineer Bartholomew told Lieutenant Clancy and Call Officer Weber, when they arrived in response to his telephone message, that someone had knocked at his door. Upon opening it a revolver was thrust in his face, and he was ordered to "stick 'em up." The bandit wore a handkerchief to conceal his lower part of his face, but only a vague description of his general appearance was obtained.

The door caught the bandit's arm, holding him fast in spite of his frantic efforts to turn the revolver at an angle where he could shoot. Mr. Bartholomew called for the fireman, but before he came the robber wrenched free and escaped.

REV. WILLIAMS DIES AT HOME IN QUITMAN
Quitman, Ga., May 25.—(Special.) Rev. J. M. Williams, 72, died here at the home of his brother-in-law, P. P. Joiner. He was a Methodist minister, and had been in the Florida conference for the past 35 years. He was born in Virginia and married Miss Lila Joiner in 1885. He is survived by his widow, two children, Mrs. M. M. Gitten, of Fort White, Fla., and W. G. Williams, of Miami. The funeral was held here.

AXMAN IS CAUGHT; HANDS STILL RED

Birmingham, Ala., May 25.—Frank Owens, negro, was arrested early this morning with a blood-stained ax in his possession after Richard Warner and L. M. Watkins, both white, had been found a few blocks from each other mortally wounded. Both were suffering from blows over the head. Watkins had not gained consciousness tonight.

Owens was shot in the leg when he attempted to escape from arresting officials. He confessed to police that he assaulted one of the men but laid the blame for the other crime on an alleged accomplice.

Robbery Was Motive.
Robbery is ascribed by police for the crimes. Blood stained coins and currency amounting to $14.36 were found on Owens' person. He also had in his possession a broken watch chain which matched the part found in Warner's pocket.

Owens refused to reveal his identity for several hours today and the names of the two white victims were not known until they were identified at the hospital by relatives. Warner had gained consciousness tonight but was so weak from loss of blood that he could give no account of the attack on him. Watkins is believed fatally wounded.

Tried to Escape.
Owens was arrested a few minutes after Warner was attacked. When he saw the officers he threw the ax over a fence. After being put in the police car he made a plunge for liberty but shot from an officer halted him. He only sustained a flesh wound in the leg.

Birmingham has had a long series of ax assaults and 18 persons have died as a result in the past few years. Odel and Pearl Jackson are to be tried in circuit court this week charged with slaying Elizabeth Rouse and Juliet Vigilante on October 22, 1922. Peyton Jackson is under a death sentence in connection with the same crime.

P. Ford Clark Strengthens Dunlap Insurance Agency

A substantial business institution that has kept pace with Atlanta's wonderful growth is the Edgar Dunlap Insurance Agency, the activities of which have very materially aided in making Atlanta the fourth largest insurance center in the world.

For the great increase in business acquired recently the company is largely indebted to P. Ford Clark, one of the best-known and most popular insurance men in the city. Mr. Clark has an extensive clientele among all classes of Atlanta's citizenry, and his prominent connection with several fraternal organizations and civic bodies gives to him a wide circle of friends and acquaintances and makes him a strong human asset of the company. For seven years he was assistant cashier of the southern department, and later took over work as statistician. Although a very busy man, he has found time to devote to the city and its welfare and progress. He is a member of the plaza committee of the chamber of commerce, and is one of the grounds committee of the Georgia Children's Home society, and treasurer of the Human Progress association, recently organized in Atlanta. He is chairman of Palestine lodge No. 480, F. and A. M., and vice-president of the Fellow Craft club of the lodge. Mr. Clark has also achieved prominence as a writer, having contributed interesting and valuable articles to The City Builder, official organ of the chamber of commerce, as well as to other publications.

Among a number of other experienced insurance men who have brought prestige to the company is Toulman W. Hurt, a well-known and popular Atlanta business man, who specializes in the bond department, and it is largely through the successful operation of his branch that the company has become one of the most important leaders in the insurance field in the south.

An insurance business, to be successful, must be substantial. It must have as its officials men of undoubted business integrity, men of standing in the community and citizens.

These men who can gain and hold the confidence of the public. This statement properly and truthfully prefaces a list of the officers of this company. It is doubtful if any other insurance business in Atlanta, or in the entire south has a more substantial or more prominent official family than has the Edgar Dunlap Insurance Agency. The men who direct its affairs and are responsible to its patrons are as follows:

Edgar Dunlap, president; Walter T. Candler, vice president; Henry C. Hing, vice president; Asa G. Candler, Jr., vice president; Arthur W. Ellis, secretary; G. R. Harwell, assistant secretary; William Candler, treasurer; Edgar F. Dunlap, assistant treasurer.

When a man buys insurance his first thought is of safety, and the cost comes as a secondary consideration. He wants to feel assured that he or place his policy in the safe and put worry aside. He finds satisfaction in the certainty that his risk is in the hands of safe, sound and dependable companies. He may have this assurance by dealing with the Edgar Dunlap Insurance Agency, because every company it represents is unquestionably reliable and has the confidence of business men throughout the world.

The company is local agent for the North River Fire, the Continental Fire, the Citizens Fire and Rain, the Phoenix Assurance Fire, the Northern Assurance Fire, and the Tokio Fire; and is general agent for the Ocean Accident Guarantee Corporation (burglary and casualty), the Union Indemnity (surety bonds), the Hartford (live stock), and the London Assurance (marine).

"It's an amateur detective, kid," Johnson Boller added significantly. "He knows every crook in town. He's coming here to give you the once over."

"I should worry," murmured the self-possessed young man.

"Johnson, don't be idiotic," Anthony said, as he laid a hand on the boy's arm. "I'll have to introduce you. What's your name, my lad?"

"Eh?" asked the unusual boy, staring hard at Anthony.

"Your name? What is it?"

"Well—er—Prentiss," the youth admitted.

"Is that your first name or your last name?"

"That's just my last name," the boy smiled. "First name's David."

"David Prentiss, eh?" Anthony murmured with some satisfaction, for it had a substantial sound. "Well, David—er, Hitchin, how are you?"

"Mr. Hitchin, my young friend, Mr. David Prentiss."

The boy's hand went out and gripped Hitchin's heartily enough. Mr. Hitchin held it for a moment and peered at David—and one saw what a real penetrating stare he owned.

"Mr. Prentiss is staying with me for a little," Anthony smiled as they moved toward the elevator again.

"Staying with you, eh?" Hitchin repeated, with a careful survey of David's well-worn storm coat, and added, with characteristic bluntness: "Working for you, Fry?"

"My guest," Anthony said annoyed; and then the car came down and the door opened and they left Mr. Hitchin, but the boy cocked an eye at Anthony and asked fadily: "What was the idea of that—staying with you? I'm not staying with you."

"You may decide to stay for a little,"

"Not me," said David.

"We shall see," Anthony chuckled. "This is our floor."

Wilkins—the priceless, faultless Wilkins who had been with Anthony for sixteen years—opened the door and, even though he were Wilkins, started a trifle at the sight of David and his cap.

"Make yourself at home, David," Anthony smiled. "Well, shed your coat and find our smoking jacket."

Curiously enough, David had lost much of his grinning assurance when they rejoined him. The impudence had left his eye and the boy seemed downright uneasy. He started and rose at the sight of them, and his quick nervous smile lingered only a moment as he said:

"I think I'd better be going, after all, Mr. Fry. It's pretty late and—"

"Just a minute or two, and perhaps you'll change your mind," Anthony said quietly as he dropped into his pet chair. "You'll permit a personal question or two, David?"

"I suppose so."

"Then how old are you?"

"Twenty."

"Ah! Parents living?"

David nodded.

"And in rather humble circumstances, perhaps?"

This time David glanced at him keenly, queerly, for an instant—opened his lips and shut them again and ended with a mere jerk of a nod.

"How about schooling, David? You've been through high school?"

"Er—yes."

"You're working, of course?" Mr. Fry asked sharply.

"What? Oh, yes," said David.

"In just what line?"

"I'm a plumber's helper!" the boy said guiltily.

"Wait a second, kid!" Mr. Boller put in. "Let me see those hands."

"Well, they—these—these—"

"Get roughened up yet?" David said quickly. "I just went to work yesterday."

"The boy's lying, Anthony!" Mr. Boller said bluntly.

"They may be hands designed for better things, David! Tell me, are you quite satisfied to be a plumber's helper, or was it the only thing you could find in the way of employment?"

"It was all I could find," David muttered, glancing at the door. And then, with his quick smile, he rose again. "I'd like to sit here and answer questions, Mr. Fry, but I'll have to run along and—"

"Hear what I have to say," Anthony went on quickly and impressively. "For now we come to my reason for bringing you here, David, you are poor. You are without a profession—without a business of your own. Your brightest hope at the present is to become a plumber."

"Say—"

"I should have said, your brightest chance, Anthony corrected.

"Your ambition, David, is altogether different. Your ambition is to become—what?"

And now, before the penetrating, hypnotic eye, David seemed, not without warrant, to have grown downright frightened. He glanced swiftly at Anthony and the door. "I don't know," he said breathlessly. "What's the answer?"

"Well, what do you want to become? A doctor? A lawyer? A teacher? An electrician? A journalist? A clerkman? A painter? An architect? A mining engineer? A civil engineer?"

It was plain to Johnson Boller that the situation was getting beyond David's doubtless nimble, doubtless criminal mind. The boy held up an uneasy hand and said hoarsely: "A civil engineer! You got it out of me, didn't you? And now I'd better go and—"

David, in short, was doing just what ninety-nine per cent of the human race insists on doing: even at the hint of opportunity, he was trying to face about and escape. But more than that, David, obviously one of the lower classes, was treating Anthony Fry with a tolerance that was more than mere disrespect. He was causing Johnson Boller to chuckle again over his cigar—and in spite of his purely abstract interest, Anthony's color grew darker and his voice decidedly sharper.

"Sit still," he commanded, "and listen to me, David, up to this evening you had no real hope of attaining your ambition. In fine, opportunity to make the goal was not yours. Now opportunity is yours!"

It is it? David said throatily, albeit he did not resume his seat.

"Because this is what I mean to do for you, David: I mean to take you out of your present humble situation and educate you. I mean to have you here to live with me."

"What?" David gasped.

"From this very evening!" Anthony said firmly, and also astonishingly. "I shall outfit you properly for the best engineering college we can find, and entered there for the most complete engineering course. If you are helping in the support of your family, I shall pay to them a sum equivalent to your wages each month—or perhaps a little more, if it be essential to removing all anxiety from your mind. Do you follow me?"

David merely clutched the edge of his coat and gulped, staring fascinatedly at Anthony.

"You're reasonably wealthy, and I shall bear every expense that you may incur, David. When you have graduated, and everything that can be taught you has been taught you, I shall establish you in proper offices and use my considerable personal influence to see that you are supplied with work, and again until you are self-supporting, I shall bear all the expense. In short, David," Anthony concluded, "I am holding opportunity before you—opportunity to do, without trouble or worry or delay, the thing you most desire. Well?"

"What's my cap and coat?" David demanded.

Anthony merely smiled with waxing curiosity.

"So you are really selecting opportunity at the first knock, eh?" he mused.

And now David stilled his rising excitement only with a huge effort. He gripped his chair and looked Anthony in the eye.

"Opportunity be—"

"Give me my cap and coat!"

"Well, what are you going to do if you don't get them?" Anthony laughed.

"Does that mean that you're going to keep me here, whether I want to stay or not?" the boy asked quickly.

"Not just that, perhaps, but it does mean that I'm going to keep you here for a little while, David, until you've come to your senses. So just sit down again and consider what I have offered you. Sit still for just one minute and consider—and then give me your answer."

Finger-tips drumming, benevolent gaze beaming over his glasses, the unusual Anthony waited. David's scared eyes roved the room. Half a minute gone one saw clearly that the mental processes had taken their grip. An extremely visible change was coming over David Prentiss. He gulped down certain emotions of his own, and presently managed to smile, un- easily at first and then with a certain confidence. He cleared his throat and, with a slight huskiness, addressed Anthony:

"Er—"

"Er—"

"I understand that you want me to stay here until I fully appreciate all you've offered me, Mr. Fry?"

"Virtually that."

"Well, I appreciated that all along; but—but I was sort of worried about it getting so late, you know," David said brightly. "I certainly do appreciate it, and I thank you very much. Now can I have my cap and coat?"

"Really decided to grip the opportunity, eh?" Anthony asked keenly. "You bet!"

Johnson Boller laid aside his paper. "Now, please him, Anthony!"

"He's standing up and holding the sugar on his nose. Slip the kid a five-dollar bill and let Wilkins—"

"Do you really imagine that I'd rouse all the boy's hopes and then play him a shabby trick like that?" Anthony asked sharply.

"Huh?"

"Most emphatically not," Mr. Fry said. "I'll play no such shabby trick on the youngster. He shall have exactly the chance I promised, and I shall watch the working out of the ideal with the most intense interest. David, I'm going to keep you here from this minute."

"Keep me here?" David echoed blankly.

"Certainly."

David gazed fixedly at the elevator.

"Well, I'll tell you, Mr. Fry," he said. "I'd like to stay tonight, but I can't—not tonight. You see, I have to go home to my father. He's an—"

"An invalid?"

"Well, telephone the good news to him," Anthony smiled.

"You can't," said David. "We're too poor to have a telephone."

Anthony smiled and shrugged his shoulders. "Very well, David. Then you shall write him a note, and I'll have Wilkins take it to him."

David swallowed audibly and smiled a wild little smile.

"That would be the worst possible thing. I'll have to go myself and talk it over with father—and now if I can have my cap and my coat?"

It came as a familiar phrase. It caused Anthony's eye to darken suddenly as he sat back and stared at the boy.

"Confound your hat and coat!" he rapped out. "See here, David. You write the note, and I myself will take it to your father and explain—and be sure that he will rejoice. There is the desk. Where do you live?"

His tone not nearly so benevolent. Opposition, as always, was rousing Anthony's unfortunate stubbornness.

"I can't tell you where I live!" David said hoarsely.

"In the name of heaven, why not?" Anthony snapped.

"Because—because—well, you may not understand this, sir, but I promised father I wouldn't tell any one where we live. I'll have to tell father and then come back here in the morning, Mr. Fry; only—I have to go home now!"

His voice broke strangely.

JUST NUTS

Anthony's square chin set. He rose with a jerk and stood surveying the nervous David, a tall, commanding, rather fearsome figure. Some little time he transfixed the lad with his cold, hard eyes, while David grew paler and paler; then he walked down upon David, who cringed visibly, and seized his shoulders.

"David," he said sternly, "you have no conception at all of what I am trying to offer you. I'm going to keep you here until you have."

"Keep me—here?" David faltered.

"Just that."

The bewildered youngster was shrinking and shrinking away from Anthony. He was willing before the stern eye, and he was smiling in the sickly, most ghastly fashion. And now he was nodding submissively and speaking:

"Yes, I'll stay, Mr. Fry."

"Ah!" said Anthony.

"I—I'm glad to stay," David assured him.

Then, looking at Anthony, he contrived another smile and yawned; and having yawned once, he yawned again, vastly, and stretching the second time.

"The trouble with me is that I'm sleepy," David stated, in a strange, low voice. "I get that way because I'm not used to late hours, and when I do get sleepy—I can't think or talk or do anything. I'll be myself in the morning, Mr. Fry; but if I'm going to stay here, I'd like to go to bed now."

He yawned again and still again, quite noisily and eyeing Anthony in an odd, expectant, pleading way. Anthony, after a puzzled moment, shrugged his shoulders and smiled.

"Go to bed if you like, David," he said. "There are one or two things I want to say to you first."

"Yes, sir," David said obediently. "For the first—no dissipation. You don't drink, David?"

"Not a drop, sir."

"And for another," Anthony said gravely, "no women!"

"Eh?" said David.

"Absolutely no women in this Hotel Lasalle!" Anthony repeated, with a fanatic force that caused Johnson Boller to snort disgustedly and throw up his hands. "This is, perhaps, more strictly than any other house in New York, an all-man establishment. There are not even women servants here, David, and other sorts of women don't run in and out of here."

David, facing Mr. Fry, gazed at the floor and yawned again.

"I guess I'll go to bed," he said weakly.

"And before that we'll start you on the right track," Anthony said with a gentle smile. "You'll take a good, hot bath."

He pressed the button and Wilkins appeared.

"The guest-chamber for young Mr. Prentiss, Wilkins," said Anthony. "You will outfit him with pajamas of my own and the gray bathrobe I used last year. Tomorrow we'll get you something that fits, David."

David nodded numbly.

"And, Wilkins," said his master, "you will assist Mr. Prentiss with his bath."

David's nod broke in two.

"I don't want any help," he said. "But Wilkins—"

"Wilkins or anybody else; I don't want any help with a bath. I know how to take a bath, at least. I don't know how you swells take yours, but I take mine alone; I don't want any one pottering around me, and I won't have it!"

His countenance flushed angrily, and Anthony favored him with an indulgent smile. After all, he was very young.

"As you please, David. Show him to the north bathroom, Wilkins. That is all."

It was after midnight when Johnson Boller was awakened by a noise.

Somewhere, Anthony was snoring and moving about. Somewhere else, Wilkins was chattering; but the main impression was that the roof had fallen in—and Johnson Boller, struggling into his bathrobe, stumbled to the door and burst into the brilliant living room.

In the center of the room, flattened upon the floor, was Anthony's substantial little desk. Two chairs were on their sides, also, but the striking detail of the picture was furnished by David Prentiss. That young man was sprawled crazily, just beyond the desk, and beside him, holding him down with both hands, was Wilkins tastefully arrayed in the flowered silk pajamas Anthony had discarded last year as too vivid.

"I've got him, sir!" Wilkins' lips reported, as his master appeared. "Let him up!" Anthony said sharply.

Fair-Weather Wives

BY MILDRED BARBOUR

A MODERN CINDERELLA.

The library was cool and by contrast with the blaze of sunshine and color in the garden outside.

The girl who slipped through the French windows, flung wide ajar to the summer afternoon, breathed a little sigh of satisfaction and dropped into an inviting armchair. She reached a lazy arm toward the towering book shelves behind her, pulled down a volume at random, and, curling one foot frankly under her, was lost to the world of realities.

Outside in the garden, under the shade of a vine-hung pergola, a group of women in airy summer frocks were having tea. A slim, tawny wolfhound slumbered on the gravelled path close to a tinkling fountain. Pigeons, sleek, glossy, iridescent, strutted and cooed in the sunshine. Framed by stately, close-clipped trees, were the blue waters of Long Island Sound, like a Turner seascape, with here and there the flash of a snowy sail.

The girl in the armchair lifted absent eyes momentarily to this vista, and dropped them again to her book. But the tinkle of well-bred laughter from the direction of the pergola brought a tiny smile to her red lips, as she recalled the success of her stealthy flight across the garden to avoid the eyes of the chattering tea party.

She had been playing with a brood of rollicking Angora kittens in the shade of the wisteria arbor when Matilda had come to tell her that the bridge game was over in the drawing room and the ladies were adjourning to the garden for tea. It wouldn't do at all for them to find the sub-deb daughter of the house in the simplest of summer frocks romping with the kittens. Besides, on close inspection in the all-revealing sunlight, they might discover that the sub-deb daughter was really twenty and not the sixteen that she was passed for.

Matilda was her mother's maid, and fully appreciated the fact that the pretty, Dresden china figurine who bore the name of Mrs. Boice-Nevis was enjoying a temporary respite from maternal responsibility. Having just successfully married off the two elder girls—Julie to a young stock broker, and Leila to a risingy famous concert singer—she preferred to keep Marjorie, her youngest, in the background for a few seasons while she had herself enjoyed a bit of a belated fling without a grown daughter tagging beside her.

Relentless time was snapping at Mrs. Boice-Nevis' trim heels, but Marjorie would have years, and years in which to pursue the will of wisp of pleasure, she reasoned.

Moreover, Marjorie didn't mind. She was quite used to playing Cinderella. She couldn't recall when she hadn't been kept in the background while Julie and Leila sought Fairy Princes. In appearance, she was quite the same. A casual glance at the slim, lithe young body, the pure, perfect oval of her face, the fair hair parted demurely over the low forehead and drawn down to curl discreetly over pink-tipped ears, the young, unspoiled, red mouth—would have rated her no more than sixteen.

Mentally, she was rather an enigma to her family, an enigma because no one, except perhaps her father, had ever taken the trouble to gauge her. She might have the wisdom of Solomon, or the rapid shrewdness of the modern flapper for all they knew or cared. She had been taught by a French governess until it was time to be sent to boarding school. What she had learned, there, what she knew of life, what she had done, or would do, given the opportunity, nobody to the time from their social disquisitions to find out. Julie and Leila were too busy tracking down suitable husbands. Dan, the only son of the family, was occupied with Harvard, fast, racing cars, and girls, to the exclusion of all else. Mrs. Boice-Nevis was up to her pretty, petulant eyes in society, and her husband was bent to the grindstone of financial provision for these luxuries.

So Marjorie slipped about unobtrusively from place to place, getting out of people's way with a cheerfulness that held no trace of bitterness.

She raised her head quickly as the library door opened, sensing another visitor.

Her father entered, carrying a brief case, and followed by another, younger man, whose distinctive good looks were instantly apparent, even in the dimness.

"Dark in here after the sunlight," Boice-Nevis remarked, trying to focus his eyes. "But, at least, we'll be undisturbed. My wife's having a bridge party, so—"

Marjorie stirred in her chair, came half to her feet, and her father swung round with an exclamation. "Who—oh, hello, Marjorie! You startled me. How's my girl?"

"Doing nicely, dad," she smiled demurely. "I'm just going."

"This is Reed Hollister, Marjorie," he gestured toward the younger man. "My youngest daughter, Hollister."

The other man bent over the slim, cool hand the girl extended with courteous formality. He raised his eyes to her face—and kept them there.

Marjorie found herself flushing under his gaze. She had never lacked poise, despite her youth, but there was a compelling quality about Hollister which disturbed her. She couldn't have told why. She had recognized the name—a name that was a power in the financial world. She knew him to be a dominant personality, the sort that asserts itself in the most casual contact, but she couldn't quite reconcile the fact with her own curious reaction toward him. It was fear she felt, nothing short, fear and unaccountable dislike.

With a nod and a smile she went to the door which he opened for her. As he turned back into the room, she heard him say:

"I didn't know you had another daughter, Nevis. I've met Mrs. Barclay and Mrs. Erskine, of course, and your son, Dan, at the club."

"Marjorie's been away at school," Boice-Nevis was opening his brief case, removing papers. "She's not 'out' yet. To tell the truth," he grinned, "I think her mother'd like pretend that she's still in the cradle."

"I see," said Hollister gravely. "Now," Boice-Nevis dropped into an armchair, motioned his guest toward another. "I'll get down to business, and not waste your valuable time further. Since I can't persuade you to stop for the week-end, I'll tell you my sad story," he made a wry face, "and let you get the 5:45 to town."

He offered Hollister a cigar, took one himself and struck a light. Hollister bent his handsome head to receive the proffered light. Then his eyes went to the door through which Marjorie had passed.

"On second consideration, I'm going to accept that invitation for the week-end—if I may."

Jane Hedden Hat Pattern

HATS FOR EVERY HOUR.

In this new group of millinery designs are all the hats necessary for the complete wardrobe of the average girl. Any girl except a society bud or a Broadway actress will find here the hats needed for all occasions.

The group consists of an elaborate simple lace hat for formal afternoon and evening, a tailored turban, a dance turban, a dressy small hat, and a semi-sports tailored model of unusual design. These will fill the hourly needs of a seaside vacation or grace the costumes for a frivolous summer at home.

Certainly any one will get more results from the labor of creating these hats than from embroidering an 18-inch doll. The time needed is no more than that. Our patterns give clear and simple directions for every step from frame to trimming.

No. 2357.

Model 2357 is a very frivolous or a very serviceable little girl's hat, according to the material which is used for it.

For the flower girl, fine net or organdie is the accepted fabric and makes the daintiest of bonnets. The hand-made flowers may correspond with the bridesmaids' costumes or colors. If, for example, the bridesmaids' frocks are the yellow of sunset roses, the flowers on the flower girl's hat may be the same shade and the hat may be of ecru net. If the bridesmaids affect rainbow or pastel tints, the hand-made flowers may be the same tints and the hat proper white organdie.

The mother who makes the simplest of children's dresses and can do any hand work will take pride and pleasure in creating this hat. The hat design becomes utilitarian by using darker colors. French blue and rose or sand and copen make lovely practical hats.

MATERIAL REQUIRED. Three-fourths yard 36-inch material, 1-4 yard of each of at least two colors for the flowers, 1 lining, 1 pressed crown, 3-8 yard elastic net or willow, 3 yards brace wire.

HAT PATTERN ORDER. This order will bring you pattern and working instructions for making hat illustrated above. Fill in name and address, enclose 25 cents in stamps, postal note or coin—address envelope, Hat Pattern Department, Atlanta Constitution.

Enclosed find 25 cents. Please send me Jane Hedden Hat Pattern and instructions No. 2357.

The Spectre of the Track

BY WILLIAM F. STURM

Again Rex thought of his left front tire. If he slowed down and took no chances he had second place won by two miles. If he didn't slow down he might wreck his car and not finish. Races were not won by being over-cautious. Came the thought of the three behind in his pit. The grandstands were a mass of waving, shouting thrill-mad people. It was still anybody's race. Monroe shot into the south turn with undiminished speed. He held his steering wheel with a grip of steel. Would the tires withstand the sandpapering effect of the skidding on the turns which his speed would cause? He didn't know. He was through the first corner. On the short straightaway which formed the middle of the long turn. His tires still held! As he shot into the first corner of the north turn and the last one of the race.

Your Kitchen

Are you a "kitchen slave," or are you the master of the home workshop?

No workman can get good results without good tools: how is your kitchen workshop equipped? Have you the tools necessary to do a good job, or are you trying to get results with inadequate equipment?

Our Washington bureau has compiled for you a bulletin on the ideal kitchen. It tells how the kitchen should be arranged to save steps, time and trouble; it tells you how you can turn an unsatisfactory kitchen into a model of comfort and convenience. It lists for you every article of necessary kitchen equipment that you should have to produce results.

It discusses the kitchen walls, ceiling, floors, miscellaneous equipment, cooking utensils, storing utensils, the pantry, working surfaces, stoves, etc. It tells you tricks and devices that you can adopt to make your kitchen work easy and pleasurable, instead of difficult and unpleasant.

If you want this bulletin, fill out the coupon below and mail as directed.
